

Priority #5 : Protect and decentralize public services

---

We care about improving the state of our public network and ensuring access to it. Being on the ground with users every day, we know what needs to be done to get the system back on track.

Abandon the false promise of privatization

Turning to the private sector puts additional pressure on our shoulders by exacerbating the staff shortage. It is time to close this breach and focus all our energies on improving the services we provide. We have to go with a truly public system !

We also have to agree on specific measures to stem the exodus to the private sector in the most-affected job titles.

For real decentralization

Centralization is synonymous with headaches for workers in the public system. We need to go in the opposite direction and return power over the system's organization to employees and the public. The government must drop any new centralization projects.

Plan for future staffing needs

The current staff shortage clearly demonstrates the shortcomings in workforce planning by the employers and the government. The crisis we are now experiencing could have been averted if we had been in the loop. We need to be part of the conversation about finding the new employees we will need in the years to come.
