It is mandatory for all workers to report workplace incidents.

Reporting allows us to:

- Protect our rights
- Hold the employer accountable for prevention and compensation
- Improve work methods
- Assess workplace risks in the sector

For effective care

Prevention is everyone's business!

PRENDRE LE TEMPS

Taking the time to report a hazard or incident protects our right to a safe workplace.

fSSS CSN

A work-related accident is an event at work that injures a worker.

A non-compliant (or hazardous) situation is one that endangers health and safety.

In either case, taking the time to make a report today could prevent an accident tomorrow—for you and your co-workers.

Underreporting has real consequences in our workplaces

- Non-representative statistics
- Less prevention research
- Underrepresentation in the CNESST's work
- Absence from action plans and priorities

So why do people hesitate to report workplace hazards and accidents?

- They downplay the incident's seriousness
- They don't know the procedures or their rights
- They fear retaliation
- They worry about stigma
- They think the incident wasn't important

Have you seen a hazardous situation at work?

Have you been injured on the job?

Do you want to make your workplace healthy, safe, and free from all types of hazards?

- Contact your union now
- Find out about basic principles of occupational health and safety
- Ask questions and get the facts to clarify any gray areas
- Report it!

Simply reporting it can make all the difference.

